

Hey ladies!!!

So I'm Laurel, yalls BG mom! I am from Cypress, Texas and going to be a sophomore this fall. I have been so excited for camp since last spring and I cannot believe I get to see all of yalls beautiful faces SO SOON. Literally so hype. And while this is all very exciting, I know that it's a scary time with corona and entering a new chapter in life and even just sitting on a zoom with a bunch of strangers. I want to reassure yall that its okay to feel all these emotions and encourage yall in the fact that God has got your back and that I have been praying for yall continually. I would like to help ease some anxieties with these specific concerns and say that different doesn't mean bad and I can already see all the good that can happen despite crazy circumstances. Also, college can be a difficult transition, but I will be by every single one of your sides every step of the way. Whether you have a question about a class or need advice, never hesitate to reach out!! (And don't worry I'll reach out too 😊). Lastly, yes, camp on zoom can feel strange but I promise to do everything I can to make yall feel comfortable and I can assure yall that zoom doesn't change anything except location! This is still real camp! I can't wait to get to know yall and can't wait to be a resource for yall and more importantly a friend! I love coffee and the outdoors and pretty much any activity so I can't wait to hang with yall. This first semester of college is going to be so good and I just know God has incredible plans for each and every one of yall. Remember that you are loved and seen and perfectly made and absolutely adored!

♥ Laurel

How much I already love yall<3
